

STRATFORD
JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL

YEARBOOK

OUR SCHOOL

In the year 1564 in the month of April a playwrite destined to make his mark in the world of literature, William Shakespeare was born. In searching for a name for their new Junior High School 400 years later, the Board of the West Jasper Public School District felt that it was fitting to name their new school, Stratford, after his birthplace Stratford - On - Avon.

Stratford is a new school in which several experiments have been tried in design and construction. It is a thrcce story building with over 67,000 square feet of instructional floor space. There is a large tube around the outside of the school from which air, heated or refrigerated, is piped to rooms on each of the three floors. The floors in the library, shop and home economics areas consist of a resilient layer of colored latex flakes covered with polyurethane plastic. One of its main features is said to be its durability. Time is needed to assess this feature. Terrazo floors in the hallways certainly give the school a clean, bright appearance and are easy to maintain. The final cost of the building is just over three-quarter of a million dollars - a real investment in our young people for many years to come.

The school, now in its third year of operation, accommodates 700 students in 24 classrooms and is staffed by 34 teachers. The curriculum includes all the academic subjects and a variety of courses in music, art, dramatics, home economics, industrial arts, health and physical education.

DEDICATION

This is the year that Canada and Canadians celebrate one hundred years of confederation - 1967. Since July, 1867, when the four provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, and Ontario joined together to form the country known as Canada, the number of provinces and the number of people has increased steadily. Canada has attained a position as a world leader in war and in peace. Wheat from the Prairies is shipped to every corner of the world and Canada's vast mineral resources supply the industries of a score of countries.

However, Canada's assets are not only her forests and rivers, her fields and mines, but there is another resource - one vastly more important than all others together. It has been said that a nation's most precious assets are her people, and Canada is no exception, for it is the people who lumber the forests, harness the rivers and farm the fields; it is the people who make the developments in science and art; it is the people who fight in wars to protect what they believe in. Of the people, the children are the most important, for they are the future citizens of the country and it is to them that we dedicate this yearbook - to them and to the challenge of making the future as prosperous as the past.

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

The growth and development of a great country occurs because people believe in her goals and enjoy living under conditions which they choose. The yearbook committee is to be commended on their selection of the theme, "One Hundred Years of Progress", for this year's publication. The year 1967 will be remembered as the anniversary of Canadian Confederation.

Confederation represents much more than 100 years of growth. From the days when the early settlers first arrived in 1540, until about 1848 much growth and expansion had taken place as several nations colonized the new land. From then until 1867 several conferences by Canadian leaders paved the way for the union of the Canadian provinces.

Our schools have followed a similar pattern of growth. From a small slow beginning have come our large complex and rapidly changing school systems. The development of young people is still their major concern. In our ever accelerating life, the schools goal is to mature boys and girls, visionary in their outlook, responsible in their actions, and dedicated to the worth of individual human life.

This yearbook salutes the growth of Canada, the students of today and the citizens of tomorrow.

A. K. Brimacombe

A. K. Brimacombe,
Principal.

President's Message

As this school term draws to an end I look back on many fond memories that I will never forget. It has been my privilege, and yours, to have attended one of the most progressive schools in Edmonton. My personal thanks go to all the students who have helped to make it so. The members of the Student's Council have done an outstanding job in organizing school activities throughout the term. We owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Awid, our Student Union Advisor, for his contributions to our welfare.

To the students that are progressing into Senior High, this will have been your final year at Stratford. Best wishes for success are extended to you. To those students that will attend Stratford next year, remember to keep the torch of Stratford held high.

I would also like to thank the Stratford staff for the fabulous job they have done. Their efforts will long be remembered. I only hope that I have fulfilled my part as President in the same manner as you students expected when you placed your confidence in me.

Thank you and au revoir.

Roy Aldridge

IN MEMORIAM

"Death lies on her,
like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field."

- Shakespeare.

Teachers and classmates alike will, I think, remember Diane Elaine Brown indeed as a flower. Flowers seem to have that special quality of infecting people with cheerfulness, of delighting them. So did Diane. Seldom did her dimpled smile fade or her bubbling personality cease to bubble.

Diane was a diligent and cooperative worker both at school and in her community. She was the kind of girl who stayed on after 3:15 to see if she "could help you with anything?" When she did hurry off, it was to attend her girl's club meeting or help out with some of their various activities.

Diane was a friend to all. We all sadly miss her, but will always affectionately remember her.

The purpose of the class prophecies in the pages that follow is not to humiliate or "poke fun" at any individual, rather, the intent is to provide clean and wholesome fun derived from a projected prophecy which in some cases is in serious earnest and in most cases a satirical, and often times, humorous attempt at prophesying what a complex and unique individual could become in the years ahead.

9A

This is reporter LaDonna Wolkow, of the Edmonton Journal, presently attending the reunion of the 1967 9A Class. It has been ten years since all members of the class have been together. The reunion is being held here, at the elaborate home of the bachelor playboy, Wayne Cholach.

As I enter the large hall, I see the well-known trumpet player, Glen Petschulat, and his wife, Lynda Reid. Following them is Dwane Hislop, who now owns Nu-Maid Dairy.

Accompanying me is a photographer from 9A, Barry Knight. What he is taking pictures of is undecided. Pat Read and Randy Bain are now talking with Barry. Pat and Randy are mad scientists working together on a modern Frankenstein. Nearby is Terrie Seniuk, in charge of "Lover's Line," is in deep conversation with Colleen Harder, a gossip column writer, who gets most of her information from Terrie. Also being consulted is Roxanne Myskiw, a fashion designer.

At the bar is seen Clifford May, a television comedian, and Marie Bixby, a bar maid. A large crowd has gathered about the travelling circus team, Russ Rennie, who swallows flames and swords, and Janice Starling, who has become an authentic bearded lady.

The "Monkees" would have attended today with their manager, Lorraine Saunders, but she was married yesterday to Mike Nesmith.

Now entering the ballroom is Scott Goodwin who runs Edmonton's turtle races. There is millionaire Norval Carnegie and his wife (formerly Karen Letawsky). Norval fell over his feet and discovered oil. Talking to him is Marianne Calvert, a young woman struggling to be a successful ballerina and her maid, Marilyn Chisolm, who is now married and has twelve children. In a secluded corner nearby four interesting young ladies are talking. They are Trudy Huizinga, who wrestles professionally, Janet LaBine, who plays bass violin from a stepladder, Wendy Whitford, who rides space capsules internationally, and Doreen March, who models hip waders. On the piano, Randy Popowich is accompanying Darlene Spilar as she sings one of her opera songs.

One member has not been mentioned. He could not attend. Harry Kamp, a zoo keeper, felt he could not leave his animals unattended.

This concludes the on-the-spot report from The Edmonton Journal's reporter Wolkow.

LaDonna Wolkow,
Class 9A

"Caught in the act!"

Mr. Campbell: "LaDonna, what does HNO_3 signify?"

LaDonna Wolkow: "Well - oh, er - I've got it right on the tip of my tongue, sir."

Mr. Campbell: "Well, spit it out fast, it's nitric acid."

9B

As those two debonair, handsome millionaire men strolled through the doors of their lounge they viewed a terrifying scene. These two men, of course, could only be Eddy Sieswerda and his associate, Keith Dixon, partners in possession of the Philadelphia mint. The scene was an oddly assorted group who made up the 1966-67 9B class. The musical entertainment for the evening was to be provided by the organ grinding Joanne Demaine accompanied by her acting monkey, Valerie Clark. Dan Lenfesty, the Social Worker, was not present at this time as he was working in close quarters with the dipsomaniac, Fred Zelensky, who was attempting to retrieve a quarter from the sewer by means of gum attached to the end of a string. Just then, Don McNabb, the ditchdigger, directed a torrent of mild obscenities at Velma Henderson, the cleaning woman, but Don was promptly corrected by Roger Shacker, the school teacher. In one corner of the spacious room, dashing Wayne Dringenberg, photographer for Jack & Jill magazine, was conversing with the vivacious Sharlene Kerr, owner of a pizza stand. In another corner of the room, however, things took a different turn. Dean Swedgen, chief executioner at Peggy Porritt's chinchilla farm, was arguing furiously with his wife, the former Johanna Pronk. All noise stopped as everyone stared in stunned astonishment when Evan Penny, star basketball player for the Harlem Giants, strode in accompanied by his bodyguard, Rhonda Flemming, a Judo champion. The most enthralling spectacle was that of the weight lifting Jeannie Brown's manager, Donna Glover, challenging Gail Draper, a renowned woman wrestler, to an arm wrestle against Jeannie. If one listened carefully, one could hear the rumbling voice of Steve Veltman, a pipe cleaner, earnestly discussing the merits of new cleaning devices with Jerry Titley, head of the Department of Sanitation. The most sought after celebrity of the night was Gary Stevens, who had broken parole after three years in a federal prison for beating his wife and littering the courtroom with cigarette butts. His antagonist was Jim Thompson, an alternating policeman and mortician. On the couch, Afton Agnew, a truck driver for an egg delivering service, was reminiscing old times with Donna Bailey, a professional sky-diver. Donna Derouin, who played the starring role in Dr. Zhivago, was being plagued by questions from Carry Suchoplas, who owned a chain of beauty salons. The only person who no longer inhabited this world was Margaret Dunn, a former window washer, who had slipped and plunged down to her untimely death after a hurtle of 100 stories. And so ends a day that will be remembered by each 9B classmate.

Eddie Sieswerda, 9B
Keith Dixon, 9B

Mrs. Spence: "Did you find the exam questions easy?"

Student: "Oh, the questions were easy, it was the answers I had trouble with."

Junior: "Pop, when I grow up I'm going to drive a tank in the army."
Senior: "If that's what you want, I won't stand in your way."

Did you hear about the cannibal who was caught buttering up the teacher?

Keith Dixon: "Do you sometimes have trouble making up your mind?"
Steve Veltman: "Well, yes and no."

The time is 1987 and the place is the capital of Canada, Edmonton. My name is Beverly Stevenson, B.Sc; M.A.; Ph.D. and I am doing some research on the history of Stratford Junior High and in particular, my old class of 1967, 9C. Needing information for a book, I decided to consult the public records and see if I could find any information about my former classmates. However, the records were not very complete, so I invited all the people to my hotel room for a reunion.

First to arrive Robert Panik, a successful businessman who made a fortune selling reconstituted kleenex, and his wife the former Brenda Dahl. They told me that their six children were taught by Lil Eaton in a little red schoolhouse with white picket fence. However, these children had been left in the capable care of Janice Backewich, a professional baby-sitter. Three dignitaries arrived next - Irene Maxwell, first lady of the United States; Jim Kureluk, president of the Batman Fan Club; and Brenda Bruce, an Indian princess who also plays the bass violin. Next to arrive was Valerie Eldridge, a co-pilot for Air Canada, with two of her passengers - Ethel Javorsky, star defenceman with the Russian National hockey team, and Zane Bennett, a missionary Moroccan native. Betty Kaleta, a glamorous movie star, drove up in her mauve limousine that had bright yellow seats and chartreuse hub caps. She was discussing latest gossip with Marion Bush, the lovelorn column writer and Virginia Larsen, a head librarian and author of sixteen books on filing catalogue cards.

Dale Lillemo, who operated a home for retired protest marchers, walked up the stairs with his friend Barry Larson, a tall, dark, handsome beatnik who painted protest pictures with a chicken feather duster dipped in Yogurt. Marlene Bailey, the bubble gum tester, was having a heated discussion with Roger White, a heavyweight boxer, who grows tulips in his spare time. Just then, Robert Krisco, a bald owner of a chain of barber shops, Larry Stenseth, a chimney sweep and Roy Jufferman, a mathematical genius who was devoting his life to the development of a perfectly round square arrived. Linda Drysdale, the hotel waitress served orange juice compliments of June Abel who squeezed oranges in an orange juice factory. Everybody had come, except for Blaine Brown a truant officer, who was, as usual, truant. Incidentally, my book The Hallowed Halls of Stratford won a Pulitzer Prize.

Dale Lillemo: "They had to shoot poor Rover last weak."
 Robert Panek: "Was he mad?"
 Dale Lillemo: "He wasn't any too pleased."

Brenda Bruce: "What do you call a person who steals pigs?"
 Virginia Larson: "I don't know."
 Brenda: "A hamburglar."

Usually, we sit in class like this. But when it comes to exams wetrytositlikethis.

It was a cold, dismal day. A slight drizzle was falling which only served to dampen the enthusiasm of the former students of 9D who had gathered to mourn the passing of their former teacher, Mr. Funk.'

After the service they gathered in a quaint tea shop where Sharlee Rowat performed her tea cup reading, using a crystal ball for an encore. The blue smoke of playboy millionaire Glenn Miller's cigar permeated the air. Susan Williams, dressed for the occasion in black leotards and sweatshirt, read some of her beatnik poetry. Margie Berry was still asking questions which should't be asked and Arnd Bohm was still answering questions that should't be asked. Ross Blair favoured the group with a few selections on his harpsicord. Cheryl Elder made a startling entry in goggles and windbreaker, after parking her camel and Gobi Desert Express Mail Bags outside. Beer-testing was well demonstrated by Karen Larsen, while Walter Orr talked on the latest techniques in the growing of pre-plucked chickens. Flemming Larson borrowed a few silver saucers to use as collection plates at his next service in the cathedral, although he was closely followed by secret agent, Rita Hetman. Gordon Hay provided refreshments by distributing samples of banana splits fresh off his factory's production line. Forgetting her Metreçal, Maureen Graae indulged in these delicacies, while Gary Drysdale, missing his daily Navy rum ration, spiked the sauce. Wade Anderson painted jaw-breakers for those present, while Willard Milley, the football coach, knitted bonnets and booties furiously. Doug Corder designed a new barber shop on his napkin while Brent Allen, the mechanic, tightened all the bolts on the teapots. Verna Gillespie took time off from barbering her werewolf to chat with Kathy Fane, a librarian devoted to serving the ULU tribesmen in Africa. Tilly Krobek, a missionary, reminisced with Ruth Joyes, now a bush pilot for the Mongolian Airways. The top-paid usherette at the Jubilee Auditorium, Darlene Anderson, argued over pewter buggy whips with the Pewter Buggy Whip Society's president, Ron Hummel. Lyle Norgang, a professor in a California University, was occupied in dictating notes to Bonnie Dorish, a friendly secretary. Gary Fidelak pored over manuals of kiddie-car classifications in the corner. Louisa Harvey, a well-known weight lifter, talked with Marilyn Motowylo, author of a dictionary for the correct spelling of names. Generally, a good time was had by all, with the exception of Mr. Funk. He had been left out in the rain.

Kathy Fane, 9D

Arnd Bohm: "I don't like what they said about me in the class prophecy."

Mr. Funk: "Be happy Arnd, at least you're alive."

Mr. Funk: "Have you read Webster's Dictionary?"

Gary Fidelak: "No, I'm waiting till they make it into a movie."

Doug Corder: "I'm studying to be a barber."

Willard Milley: "Will it take long?"

Doug Corder: "No, I'm learning all the short cuts."

Mr. Tanasichuk: "If we breathe oxygen in the daytime, what do we breathe at night?"

Flemming Larsen: "Why, nitrogen of course."

On October 31st in 1984 the Haunted Haven passenger yacht lay suspiciously quiet off the coast of Yamal Peninsula. Cautiously, three espionage agents from AUNTY, Connie Van Dolder, Linda Pirnak, and Brigitte Wiede, now known as decimal one, decimal two, and decimal three respectively, made their way to the elaborate night club on the ship. In a revolving gilded cage, Debbie Swanson, nursery rhyme singer, entertained many distinguished guests. Among them were Dr. Sandra Rose, a surgeon famed for leaving sponges in patients, Lorene Foreman, a cigar smoking fight promoter, Heather Bruner, a camel herder from Saudi Arabia, Gary Joys, member of the Bolshoi Ballet, and last, but not least, Ken Newbert, president of the pedal-pushers club. At the bar, the bartenders, the former Kris Eby and her husband, Kevin Currie, were busily engaged in selling drinks to John Porritt, window repairman, Pat Kirby, nanny in an orphan's home, Joanne Bugaresti, yo-yo champion, and Diane Patychuk, chief button-pusher on an automatic elevator. In the far corner Norman Brandsma, a ping-pong director in the Bongo Congo, and Sylvia Conger, a 500 pound billiard ball polisher was explaining techniques to Klaudia Tietz, who was only half listening, as she was contemplating the thought of protesting against the use of ambergris in making perfume. To add to the confusion, Doug Durward a 90 pound weakling, started a brawl with Sheila Dodd, a famed woman wrestler. Suddenly, Granny Badwich, the former Olga Onufrechuk, blew in, escorted by David Musterer, the jolly green giant, and Kirk Guse, the man who puts the snap in the Snap, Crackle and Pop. In the ominous silence decimal 1, 2 and 3 were noticed. Terry Tashuk, inventor of instant Borscht, questioned the decimals.

"What are you doing aboard this private ship?"

Decimal two replied in a heavy Russian accent, "we have been assigned to investigate this ship by Russia. By a strange quirk of fate, all on board were members of the class of 9E in 1967. They were brought together by an impulse for a cruise on this ship, owned by Keith Frey, Sid Caesar of the jet set."

The spies then prepared to leave, disappointed in the quest for James Bond. Granny Badwich, neglected during the interrogation of the spies, flew in a rage, and croaked to her escorts, "away to the Badwichmobile". Shelly Hamilton, Josephine the plumber's helper, bewildered by all the excitement, fainted. In a crescendo of chugs, a tug-boat approached the Haunted Haven. In a moment Bruce Goebel, nut cracker for Planter's peanuts, and Gary Brown, lollipop salesman, clambered aboard to sell their goodies.

During their sales they brought news of Melvin Howerton's unfortunate death in a slot car accident, and Elaine Adams' success in yodelling, which he learned by correspondence courses. As the party progressed the ghost of Melvin Howerton appeared to haunt the classmates, who fled the scene.

Ken Newbert: "How many feet are there in a yard?"

Joanne Bugaresti: "That would depend on how many people are standing in it."

Mrs. Burkholder: "How do you spell inconsequentially?"

Kevin Currie: "Wrong."

9 F

Yesterday on March 17th, 1987, we met in the home of our former grade nine teacher, Mr. Tanasichuk. Everybody was seated on either the floor or chesterfield except Russel Olausen, one of Canada's leading politicians, who made a speech on the establishment of a summer camp for retired politicians.

Meanwhile, Ron Wurtz, now a diligent Sunday School teacher, was preaching the "Good Word". Danny Zelensky, host of a Go-Go 87, organized a fire-side sing-song. We all sang songs from the "good old days" such as "Ruby Tuesday" and "Fifth Street Bridge". This was interrupted by an argument between Gary Fry and Tim Vreeland. They are both practising psychiatrists and held conflicting views on whether Fred Cross really had a problem. At this point, Susan Hodgkinson demonstrated her daily yoga contortions. After this great enthralling spectacle, everyone was in need of a drink. Glenys Sykes, who works in a grape squishing factory, supplied the drinks. Raymond Threadgold, who had his official Wine Tester's Certificate, made sure that it was of the finest quality. The drinks were served by Bonnie Carr, a local waitress. Ellen Williams, the maid, cleared up the debris and Fred Cross, now a sanitary inspector, emptied the refuse.

Emily Taschuk entertained us with her famous hula dance. While she danced ice-cream bars were passed out to the guests, compliments of Warren Milley, the neighbourhood ice-cream man, who drives a little pink truck that plays sweet little tunes. Dwight Underwood, who sells balloons at the circus, also handed out samples. Lawrence Jobb gave everyone a free shoeshine and Neil Norris handed out shoelace samples to cut down on his income tax.

Brenda Robinson gave Patricia Reid, who was the headmistress of a new dog training school in the district, a free beauty treatment using quick drying cement, salted butter and chicken eggs which did not quite make the grade. Linda Thorne and Florence Hutton were exchanging ideas about clothing. Florence's new Mini skirt made from buffalo hide and held up by "Police" suspenders, was really in. These cloths were designed and sold by Linda who was dressed in a pink burlap sack to suit the occasion. Brenda Huff was now a comic-strip producer. Since Judy Young was a Ceylonese tea picker, she taught us all how to read tea leaves. Darlene Tomiak and Ilona Harke were in the same business. Darlene Tomiak was now a rigged ouija board controller and Ilona was a clairvoyant. We turned out all the lights and sat around the table, everyone in deep concentration as the two performed their rites.

Suddenly everyone heard a huge roar. Bob Southron, California's wild Boy Scout, crashed the party on his souped up kiddie car. Bob Miller, a retired Mau Mau terrorist, who as a hobby is crocheting lace doilies, was talking to Charlie Galan. Charlie was persuading Bob to get a job as his co-worker as the editor of the only piglatin newspaper in the world.

Finally, we all departed and Roy Aldridge, the bush pilot, flew us all home in his Sopwith Camel.

Tim Vreeland: "How'd you get that tire slashed?"

Charlie Galan: "Ran over a milk bottle."

Tim: "Why didn't you steer around it?"

Charlie: "The fool kid hid it under his coat."

Bob Miller: "Why do you go steady with her?"

Roy Aldridge: "She's different from other girls."

Bob: "In what way?"

Roy: "She'll go out with me."

In the stately manor of the fantastic Jack "Batman" Day, and his faithful ward, Herbert "Robin" Zechel, we traditionally hold our 9G reunion. As we enter through the huge, mahogany doors, we pause to admire the unique brass bell clappers, designed by home decorator, Kathleen Goss. We are received by the illustrious cigarette girl "Bubbles" Fontaine. While she escorted us a huge crowd gathered beside the swimming pool. My mind was preoccupied by the sight of the bald-headed professor, Robert Herodek, talking to the seven foot six inch, basketball star, "Giant" Jack Chester. Flirting with Virginia Riczu, the Egyptian ballet dancer, was that handsome playboy, Larry Faust. Helping the chef, Greta Elgstrand, was Glen Arnsdorf, a ten cent a dozen man. The secret bat-phone rang in an adjacent room and Hans Reiman, the butler, answered it. It was Commissioner Kobialko on the phone. Jack and Herbert excused themselves and Aunt Peggy took charge of the party. Diane Hawryliw, the upstairs maid of Day's manor, was trying to get the attention of Dale Brewster, local man-about-town, but failed. Pat Ruhl, successor to Judy LaMarsh, was dragging her husband, Colin McLintock, out by the ear as he had had one too many. The quizzical Norma Steirman of the Daily Snooze, was trying to ignore Bob Salahub who was persistently peering in ashtrays by force of habit as he was a garbage man by trade.

In the Bat-cave, Doug "Superman" McGhie was talking to Batman and Robin. They were after the Jewel Thieves who, with their infamous leader, Ken Davie, had made off with the jewelry of Janet Karrel, movie star. Before this, they were involved only in petty thefts, but this time, it was a big operation as the jewelry was worth over twenty-five cents. Robin, with his usual funny pun, said "Wow!!".

Meanwhile, two stories above the bat-cave, dietician, Francie Cor-scadden, due to her own cooking, had to be escorted to the hospital by Nurse Holmes. Vic Johannesen was going from one guest to another to ask for stamps to fill his trading stamp book as he needed only two more to get a correspondence course in the English language. Just back from Tokyo, "Tiger" Popowich was boasting about how he came in second in the Karate Tournament. Celia Webb, local undertaker, reported that Mavia Arndt, the great finger painting artist, had departed into the great white canvas in the sky. The Vicar, Delmar Johnson, was preaching at the back of the room, to a duo consisting of Leslie Poff, protest singer, and Betty Rurka, famous model for "Mad". At one o'clock many had departed, but the vicar kept preaching to his reluctant listeners. Finally, they all went. All in all, it turned out to be a good night as Superman, Batman and Robin caught the crooks and put them in jail.

Celia Webb: "What's flat at the bottom, pointed at the top, and has ears?"

Dale Brewster: "I give up."

Celia: "A mountain."

Dale: "Oh yeah, what about the ears?"

Celia: "Haven't you heard of mounaineers?"

Mr. McInnis: "Did you know it takes five sheep to make a sweater?"

Victor Johannesen: "Really! I didn't even know they could knit."

CENTENNIAL PROJECTS

Shown on this page are some of the many projects Stratford students participated in to help celebrate Canada's Centennial.

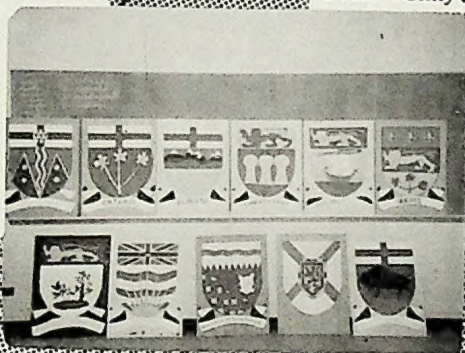

The Decor Art Club is shown above working on the first of three murals, a semi-abstract representation of Canadian wildlife which is to hang in the office.

Here, the finishing touches are applied by the club members.

This is the finished picture, held by (right to left) Kathy Fane, Susan Williams, Maureen Graae, Arnd Bohm, and Evan Penny.

Another project was the design of Coats-of-Arms for each of Canada's provinces and territories by the Students' Union. These are to be put in the auditorium and will certainly add to the school's appearance.

Here, Joanne Bugaresti, Roy Aldridge (Student Union President) and Rita Hetman, display the result of another project. The students were requested to bring 1,967 pairs of old nylons which the Elmwood Senior Citizens made into beautiful quilts such as this one for war orphans.

In future years
We will recall
Our past,
At Stratford.
The days we spent
Memories viewed
At last,
Of Stratford.
The books we read,
The halls we walked,
The desks we sat in,
The hours we talked,
All remind us of the times
We spent,
At Stratford.
We'll go our ways,
Each one different,
Yet one thing binds us all;
The tears, the smiles, the memories,
When we recall,
Stratford.
